THINGS TO KNOW

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

The New York City Marathon is almost here, and though I'm not one to run 26.2 miles, I like watching other people do so. Last year, when a friend ran the race, I used the marathon's app to track his bib number, so I could see him along the course and cheer him on. For 2018, the app has a new feature to help spectators spot their runners as many times as possible as the latter make their way through the streets. Read more about how this and other tech developments are bringing the 48-year-old event into the future inside and at metro.us.

WELCOME TO
METRO.USGOOGLE WORKERS WALK OUT OVER WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Thousands of Google employees around the world briefly walked off their jobs on Thursday to protest the company's response to sexual harassment and demand that the world's largest search engine address rising concerns about workplace inequality. The protests took place in waves, beginning in Asia and then streaming across Europe and North America, with the final wave occurring at Google's headquarters in Mountain View, California. The protests, which drew Google contract workers as well as employees, followed a

New York Times report last week that Google in 2014 gave a $90 million exit package to a senior vice president, Andy Rubin, after he was accused of sexual harassment. "This was the $90 million straw that broke the camel's back," Celie O'Neil-Hart, one of the protest organizers and who works on YouTube marketing, told reporters as she joined hundreds of other employees in the courtyard of Google's Mountain View headquarters. "But there are so many stories that we've heard for so long, and it's time for action and change," said O'Neil-Hart as she teared up.

AMBASSADOR TO RUSSIA
DIAGNOSED WITH CANCER

U.S. Ambassador to Russia Jon Huntsman has early-stage cancer and is being treated, according to comments he gave to a Utah-based newspaper in an interview published on Thursday. Huntsman, who spoke in Moscow with Deseret News in a series of conversations in August, said at the time he planned to return for treatment to Utah, where he served twice as governor. "It's just Stage 1," he told the paper. "So we'll probably get it taken care of, and we'll be fine." Representatives for the U.S. Department of State and for Huntsman could not immediately be reached for comment. Huntsman was diagnosed over the summer when he was in the United States, after noticing two small black spots behind his ear and on his thigh, he told the paper. He has appeared in Moscow for recent events, attending national security adviser John Bolton's Oct. 23 news conference in the city. Huntsman previously served as U.S. ambassador to China and had sought the Republican presidential nomination in 2012 before dropping his bid. His late father, billionaire Jon Huntsman Sr., died in February of cancer.

ALL SAINTS' DAY IN GDANSK

A general view of the Lostowicki Cemetery in Gdansk, Poland is seen on Thursday. Christians celebrate All Saints' Day by paying respects to dead family members and laying flowers and lit candles on their graves. All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day are when millions of Poles visit the graves of loved ones, often traveling hundreds of miles to their hometowns.

MARYLAND CHANGES
COURSE, FIRES DURKIN

A day after announcing head coach DJ Durkin would be retained, University of Maryland fired the coach on Wednesday, according to a school spokeswoman. School president Wallace Loh said Durkin's departure was in the best interest of the university. "Yesterday, the University System of Maryland Board of Regents announced numerous recommendations, including employment decisions about specific personnel on our campus. I accepted the Board's recommendations," Loh said in a statement. "At the same time, I announced my retirement as president in June 2019. Durkin had led practice Wednesday before athletics director Damon Evans informed him of his firing, according to multiple reports. The decision to keep Durkin, in the wake of the scandal that rocked the football program following the death of offensive lineman Jordan McNair, inspired widespread backlash on Tuesday and Wednesday. The McNair family's attorneys called the decision "callous" and "indefensible," while McNair's father, Martin McNair, said, "I feel like I've been punched in the stomach and someone spit in my face."

NEIL YOUNG CONFIRMS MARRIAGE TO HANNAH

Singer-songwriter Neil Young confirmed rumors that have persisted for months, saying he is indeed married to actress Daryl Hannah. Young revealed the marriage on Wednesday with a brief reference to "my wife Daryl" in a post on his web site about his song "Ohio," which he wrote in 1970 to protest the shooting deaths of four student protesters by the National Guard at Kent State University in Ohio. There has been speculation since August that Young, 72, and Hannah, 57, who had been dating since 2014, had married. Young's web site post accompanied the release of a new video for "Ohio" that he is using to promote "common sense gun laws" ahead of U.S. national elections set for Nov. 6 and to criticize the National Rifle Association, a lobby group devoted to supporting U.S. gun rights. The issue of gun ownership has become one of the most contentious in U.S. politics with conservatives adamantly opposed to any limitations on their constitutional rights to own firearms. "Give us common sense gun laws that protect our people, in schools, in places of worship, in the workplace and on the streets," wrote Young.

Get ready for the big race

This Sunday is the one 50,000 runners have been training for all year: the 2018 NYC Marathon. Here's everything you need to know.

LENYON WHITAKER
lenyon.whitaker@metro.us

The biggest day of racing on the New York calendar is this Sunday, when the 2018 edition of the NYC Marathon returns to the streets of all five boroughs.

The 2018 TCS New York City Marathon will start on Staten Island, with about 50,000 runners and hundreds of thousands more people cheering them on as they make their way across the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge to the finish line in Central Park.

Whether you're participating in the 26.2-mile trek, supporting the participants or will be in the city this Sunday, you need to have a plan. So we've put together a guide to all the necessary details, including start times, route, how to watch, and street closures.

It's time for the race

The official start time for the marathon is 8:30 a.m., but there are different start times for different divisions and waves.

GOOGLE MAPS

What's the route?

Runners will begin on Staten Island and cross the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge, then make their way through Brooklyn, Queens, Manhattan, the Bronx, and back into Manhattan down Fifth Avenue to finish on the southwestern end of Central Park.

Additional information can be found on the 2018 NYC Marathon spectator guide at tcsnycmarathon.org.

How to watch the NYC Marathon at home

Want to enjoy the race, but in your pajamas?

Looking for the best places to watch the race? Here's where race organizers recommend:

- Fourth Ave., BK (Miles 2-4)
- BK Stage, Fourth and Atlantic avenues (Mile 8)
- Williamsburg and Greenpoint, BK (Miles 10-13)
- Pulaski Bridge (Mile 13.1)
- First Avenue, Manhattan (Miles 16-18)
- East Harlem (Miles 18-20)

The 2018 NYC Marathon will be broadcast live on ABC 7 New York. You can check out the action online on the ABC 7 website. Marathon coverage will also be available on ESPN.

For a full list of NYC Marathon street closures, visit metro.us.

Marathon app's new feature will change how you cheer on runners

Technology will help both runners and spectators enjoy the sport more.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Running is a pretty low-tech sport — all you need are some shoes and a path — but the New York City Marathon is changing that. It wants to be the most technologically advanced race in the world, officials say, to benefit both participants in the grueling sport and those who just want to watch.

This year marks the 48th New York City Marathon. On Sunday, more than 50,000 runners and nearly a million spectators will fill streets in all five boroughs for the 26.2-mile race.

That's a lot of faces to scan if you're looking to cheer on a loved one. This is where the TCS New York City Marathon app comes in.

TCS (Tata Consultancy Services) is the title sponsor of the race and the year-round sponsor of New York Road Runners' community efforts. As an IT company, TCS wants to use technology to improve any experience, said Michelle Taylor, TCS head of sports sponsorship.

"This sport is so unique in that it's not an arena, it's covering 26.2 miles across the city," she said. "If you're standing in one place and a runner goes by and you don't see them, you sort of missed your opportunity. That's where we leverage technology for people."

For four years, the New York City Marathon app has allowed spectators to track runners via their bib number, showing a pin on a map that moves along the course as they do.

Now, a new feature called "spectator guides" aims to ensure you see that runner as many times as possible.

From wherever you start watching the race, you can tap on the in-app map and see, based on the predicted time of the runner you're tracking, green circles for next spots along the course where you can catch them, or red circles if your runner will get there before you, meaning you'd miss that chance to cheer them on.

Spectators can create an itinerary that moves along the course ahead of the runners. The app will also provide transportation directions between locations.

"That way, the spectator has a game day plan the same way the runner has a game day plan," said Taylor.

The tracking option alone has already changed how both runners and spectators enjoy the race, she added. Once, a woman approached Taylor because of her New York City Marathon shirt, asking if Taylor had run the marathon. Taylor explained no, she just watched.

"She said, 'My daughter ran and I used this tracking app and got to see her in four different places!' She had no idea who I am and that this is what I work on all year round," said Taylor. "This is such an amazing moment and accomplishment for people, everybody wants to celebrate it, and you can see how people are using this technology to bring these great moments to life."

If you swing by the New York City Marathon Expo at the Javits Convention Center from now through Saturday, you can play a TCS interactive game called "Marathon City — Spring to the Finish" that lets you run (or spin your wheelchair wheels) in place on a mat to move your character down the last 200 meters of the race toward the finish line. The game is open to anyone, official runners and beyond, and lets two people compete at a time.

CBD and the NYC Marathon: A love story for runners, doctors?

CBD is one of the top wellness trends, and that's not going to change as it becomes more mainstream for humans and animals alike. Its benefits are so great, in fact, that one NYC Marathon runner is going to use it during and after Sunday's race.

No, Jessica Filoramo is not going to smoke or ingest marijuana. CBD, a.k.a. cannabidiol, is a cannabis compound that doesn't cause a high, but can treat insomnia, anxiety and pain, including the intense kind that can come from running the 26.2-mile NYC Marathon.

"It's really made an impact in my recovery," Filoramo said of the Elixinol products she's been using as she trained for her first NYC Marathon and sixth overall. "The general pain relief is really the biggest one. I can tell a big difference in my pain levels — and quickly."

Doing long-distance runs ahead of the NYC Marathon, Filoramo, who is now a regional manager for Elixinol, is "not even icing afterward," which can soothe the muscles and inflammation and trim post-race recovery time.

As she has during training, she'll use the company's liposome drops, which aid her recovery and focus, in her water as she runs the NYC Marathon. Afterward, she'll use its topical CBD hemp balm, which is entirely plant-based and can alleviate inflammation and muscle strain.

"If there's one supplement I suggest every marathon runner have in their arsenal, it's CBD," said Col. Dr. Phillip Blair, and not just because he's Elixinol's medical director.

26.2

Miles in the NYC Marathon

"I've never seen negative effects" from CBD, Blair said, but he has seen "surprising benefits" since he began studying it in 2014. They include improved mental clarity and focus, anxiety reduction, more restful sleep and decreased intestinal cramping and muscle soreness.

In addition to sleep and nutrition, NYC Marathon runners need to nourish the endocannabinoid system (ECS) with full-spectrum CBD, which means the entire cannabis plant is used.

"ECS controls neurologic, endocrine, immune, behavior and cognitive functions," Blair explained. "When CBD is integrated into a regular long-distance training program, it can help with common concerns of endurance athletes."

Elixinol is one of many companies that offers various CBD products, and many city businesses are also getting in the game, as Metro has previously reported. NIKKI M. MASCAU

Which political 'tribe' do you belong to?

A new study reveals the beliefs that drive our votes define not two, but seven political "tribes."

ANNA HARSTEDT
letters@metro.us

The U.S. midterm elections are coming up and it could easily be assumed that most Americans will vote strictly down party lines: Democratic or Republican. But according to a new study, it's not that simple.

Hidden Tribes, a recent study by More in Common, examines the underlying beliefs that drive Americans' votes in the election, dedicated to releasing political tensions.

In the survey, the researchers collected the views of more than 8,000 people, a group of U.S. citizens statistically representative of the population based on census data. The survey participants answered hundreds of questions about what they consider today's most important issues, as well as their hopes, fears and concerns for the future. They also conducted six-hour-long focus groups with people from across the U.S.

"The primary way we split people into the tribes was by asking about their values," said Stephen Hawkins, the project's research director, in a statement. The analysts used the answers to understand the psychological forces at the heart of America's political polarization.

The study found that the beliefs that drive our votes define not two, but seven political "tribes" affected by deep feelings about identity, fairness and personal responsibility — rather than external factors like race or party.

"America is not split into two tribes, as we're sometimes told. In fact, we've identified seven distinct groups of Americans. These are our 'Hidden Tribes of America'; distinguished not by who they are or what they look like, but what they believe," the study reads.

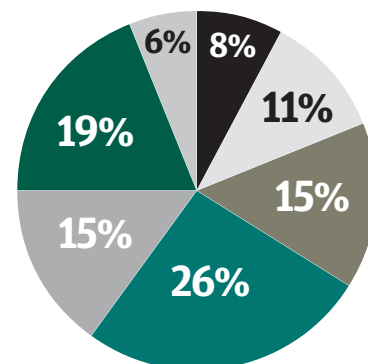

The study explains that we're currently experiencing a deep polarization and have become divided into different tribes with different codes, values, and even facts. Researchers explain that polarization has become so extreme that it impacts how we disagree on issues as well as not taking into consideration different perspectives.

"Members of the different tribes live in the same world as the others; they share the same demographic profiles," Hawkins said. "But they have totally different worldviews."

How job fairs can help you get around the traditional job interview

A handshake might be the only thing between you and your dream job.

patrick.king@metro.us

The job search is tough for everyone. Just motivating yourself to go on different job search sites to submit your résumé and perfectly fine-tuned cover letters into the faceless void can certainly sink your spirits after not hearing anything back for weeks. This is why job and career fairs can be such a great help in your search for a job.

At job fairs, you will be able to learn what certain companies are looking for in their candidates from the people who are hiring directly. By printing out a few copies of your résumé to give out on your visit, you can come prepared to have informal chats with the people who would normally be conducting your interviews if your application were accepted online. By approaching the application process this way, you can eliminate preparing the sales pitch that you normally would write up to recite in your interview, and get to know each company for what it is from the people who work there every day.

This kind of "learning from the horse's mouth" approach is the perfect way to make a good impression on a human resources division that is actively looking to fill positions. Just think about it this way: When you are attending these job fairs, you are the one who holds all of the cards. They are looking for people to fill these positions and have gone through the trouble of setting this job fair up for that very reason.

In fact, the DOE Fund, a social work and outreach program based in New York City, will be holding its own job fair today at 1420 Crotona Park E., Bronx, NY 10460 from 10 a.m.-12 p.m. and 5 p.m.-7 p.m. so that staffers can meet energized candidates to fill positions that they have open, such as Residence Manager, Service Aide and Housing Manager.

So why sit at home scrolling through job posting after job posting online? Sure, that may be a necessary evil for many of the jobs out there. But it doesn't hurt to take an active approach to your job search by checking out a job fair near you.

Who knows, maybe your dream career is just one handshake away?

Aries Personal improvements should be your priority. Update your image, qualifications, skills and anything else that needs it. Preparation is crucial.

Taurus Set the standard and stick to it. Make others adjust to your expectations, and don't back down. Your drive and determination will be impressive and worthy of substantial rewards.

Gemini Don't take shortcuts. Follow through with your plans from beginning to end. How you do things will reflect what you are capable of achieving. Celebrate with a loved one.

Cancer Discussions will result in a host of ideas that can help resolve some of the problems you're facing. Do your best to find common ground and work alongside others.

Leo Handle your money, legal and health matters carefully. Pay close attention to what's being said, and ask an expert if you aren't sure how to handle something or someone.

Virgo Follow your heart, and engage in talks that will help you understand how others feel. Knowing what you are up against will help you discern the best way to move forward.

Libra How you deal with others will determine your future. Use your intelligence, not your emotions, when you come up against opposition. Self-improvement projects will boost your confidence.

Scorpio Don't get angry when you can get moving. If you put your energy into something worthwhile, you will bring about a change that will improve your current standard of living.

Sagittarius Your tendency to think big will lead to trouble if you let your emotions take the reins. Attention to detail, precision and moderation will be required if you want to be successful.

Capricorn Consider what you want and put your plans in motion. You have what it takes to turn your ideas into reality with a push and a shove and a little persuasion.

Aquarius Partnerships will be confusing. You'll get mixed signals that will make it difficult to know what's expected of you and what you should do next. When in doubt, ask direct questions.

Pisces Make your choices known and your intentions clear. What you want will be met with approval if you are direct and detailed in your presentation. Talks will lead to financial gain. EUGENIA LAST

The end of warm weather doesn't mean the end of Smorgasburg — and this year, they're even getting into the late-night scene with a Smorgasburg Night Market in Williamsburg.

Created in partnership with Vice, the Smorgasburg x Vice Night Market will be open Fridays beginning Nov. 2 through December at the Brooklyn event venue Villain (307 Kent Ave.). Smorgasburg is bringing in 15 food vendors, including established favorites Carnal, Home Frite, Mao's Bao, John's Juice, Oyster Party, Kokus and Bona Bona Ice Cream. In addition, the market will have several newcomers:

Sandoz: Japanese "katsu sando" pork-cutlet sandwiches and pour-over miso soup.

Sons of Thunder: Poke bowls and fish tacos.

El Perrito Street Dogs: Traditional Latin and South American hot dogs.

Vice will supply a rotating lineup of DJs; on deck already are Academy Records' DJ Ron Like Hell (Nov. 2), Susan Z. Anthony of Mister Sunday (Nov. 9) and The Juan MacLean (Nov. 23). The market will be open from 6 p.m. until "late," and though admission remains free, a $25 ticket gets you priority entrance, two cocktails and 20% off food and merchandise.

Vice has been trying to make the market happen for over a year, says

Smorgasburg co-founder Eric Demby, but timing and logistics didn't work out last year. "So over the summer we started talking again, and together created the night market concept, which fits nicely with our daytime winter markets and allows more of our vendors to participate during what has been a slower time of year for Smorgasburg in particular," he says.

"We've also always wanted to do a night market after experiencing them in Asia, and this seemed like the right time and place."

In addition to the night market, Smorgasburg will keep putting on its indoor winter markets, too. The location of this year's Smorgasburg Winter — it moves around, spending last winter at Industry City and the old Williamsburg Savings Bank in 2016 — is the former OfficeMax inside the Atlantic Center in Fort Greene, across from the Barclays Center. Not glamorous digs, but the lineup will be worth it: They've got 30 Smorgasburg favorite food vendors, who have tailored their menus to the colder weather, and 25 Brooklyn Flea vendors, making for a holiday market as much as a food hall — plus, a bocce court for families and a full bar for whoever needs it.

The winter market is open at 625 Atlantic Ave. beginning Nov. 3-4, and open every Saturday (11 a.m.-8 p.m.) and Sunday (11 a.m.-5 p.m.) through March 31, 2019.

How the Koch brothers inspired this 'House of Cards' character

Greg Kinnear explains how the billionaire brothers influenced his work on season 6.

letters@metro.us

Early in the final season of "House of Cards," which debuts today on Netflix, wealthy businessman Bill Shepherd (Greg Kinnear) has a very tense encounter with President Claire Underwood (Robin Wright) in the Oval Office. There's no need to spoil the confrontation here, of course, but of all the moments that define Bill throughout the series, this one stands out.

Then again, as Kinnear tells Metro, both Bill and his sister Annette Shepherd (Diane Lane) are completely "entitled, arrogant and formidable."

Greg Kinnear's Bill Shepherd takes a cue from the Koch brothers this season. DAVID GIESBRECHT/NETFLIX

"I felt like they had a guy who is one of two parts," says Kinnear. "He and his sister are definitely married, in a way. I wouldn't call it a good cop/bad cop relationship, but the two of them together are quite effective at getting results. I think [showrunners Frank Pugliese and Melissa James Gibson] mentioned the Koch brothers or some of these other well-connected, financially well-to-do families that aren't really aren't elected to anything. They don't have a need to do anything, but through their connections and their money, they are able to express their willpower and change policy."

The Koch brothers comparison is apt. From the very beginning of season six, the pair is almost always working with one another against Claire's own presidential agenda, which leads to many showdowns, including the one in the Oval Office.

"That Koch brothers reference is a good one because you hear the word 'brothers' and immediately know there is a familial connection for them," the actor notes. "They're protective of that, and I think they need each other in a way. Yet, like all families, that can be a hard mechanism to keep working without it getting volatile."

"In fact, as it moves along," Kinnear adds before stopping himself with a laugh. "I don't want to give anything away."

And he's totally right, for as exciting as it is to discuss the nitty-gritty details of the remaining twists and turns that "House of Cards" has in store for audiences, it's even more exciting to watch it for the first time.

This is especially true for Kinnear, who counts himself among the show's many fans.

"I remember watching the first episode and the first season and being kind of gobsmacked," he recalls. "Seeing the level of work in the aesthetic, in the design, in the writing, the acting and all of it was amazing. It had elevated the television experience to something that, as someone who had worked primarily in film, I didn't realize was possible. It was hard not to be taken with what they were doing on this show, and with how consistently good and interesting it was."

The sixth and final season of "House of Cards" is on Netflix.

Who's really singing in 'Bohemian Rhapsody'?

Rami Malek and the cast talk us through the Queen biopic.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

While the look, style and flair of "Bohemian Rhapsody" are obviously going to play a huge part in the success of the film, the Queen biopic was only ever going to connect with an audience if the music and songs of the beloved band were pitch-perfect.

But how did the film's cast and crew achieve and recreate that sound? Earlier this year, Rami Malek, who plays Freddie Mercury in the film, gave Metro some insight into the process, explaining, "It is an amalgamation of a few voices.

"But predominantly it is my hope, and the hope of everyone, that we will hear as much Freddie as possible," says Malek. "I think that is the goal for all of us."

According to Gwilym Lee, who brings legendary guitarist Brian May to life in the film, Malek, Ben Hardy (as drummer Roger Taylor) and Joseph Mazzello (as bassist John Deacon) were integral to creating the sound of the film.

"We were never going to be able to play the instruments like these guys, because that's the point, they're all so virtuosos. Only Brian can play the way he plays," explains Lee. "I didn't have time to perfect the solos in that way. So it was a meticulous process to try and sell that I could play in his very, very specific and idiosyncratic style effortlessly.

"That was tough," he adds. "He has such a specific style. He plays with a sixpence coin. He plays on a guitar that he and his father built when he was 14. That alone makes him unique, let alone the talent."

But were the four actors actually playing during filming?

"You couldn't fake it," says Lee, who never actually did a guitar test for the film, but was instead taught to play by an old school friend. "You see the chords being struck, you see where the fingers are on the fret board, so you have to play that for real.

"When we would play on the day, generally speaking we would play to a backing track. But you still had to play along to the music we were hearing," he adds. "We are playing, really. You don't hear our playing in the film generally. Rami is singing, too. You can see the muscularity in his neck and throat as he is forcing his voice out."

Lee concedes, though, that the "majority of the vocals you hear in the film are Freddie's, because that's what people want to hear."

"Bohemian Rhapsody" opens in theaters today.

Jets look to snap skid at Fins

What to watch for as Gang Green visits the Dolphins in Week 9.JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Amidst a two-game slide, the New York Jets are dangerously teetering near seeing the contending portion of their 2018 season end.

At 3-5, the Jets are three games out of the AFC East and two games out of the Wild Card picture, making a Week 9 matchup against the Miami Dolphins a must-win scenario.

The Dolphins are also facing a do-or-die situation as four losses over their last five games quickly canceled out a promising 3-1 start this year.

They've been without starting quarterback Ryan Tannehill for the past three games and will be without him once again come Sunday afternoon.

Miami will be hoping history remains on their side, though, as they've won four of the last five matchups against the Jets and haven't lost at home to New York since 2015.

With AFC East relevancy on the line, here is what to watch for.

THE DEFENSE CAN GET RIGHT

The Jets' defense has become something of a liability over the past three weeks, allowing an average of 31.6 points per game. On top of that, only five teams have allowed more yards against opposing offenses than New York's 2,997.

Luckily for the Jets, they face off against a Dolphins team that will be rolling out Brock Osweiler as their starting quarterback for the fourth straight week.

The magic of his debut in an overtime win against the Chicago Bears in which he passed for 380 yards is gone. Osweiler has passed for 215 and 254 yards over his last two games, both Dolphins losses.

Still without top injured cornerback Trumaine Johnson, the Jets still have a good chance to limit their opposition on the scoreboard.

PRESSURE ON BOWLES RISING?

Jets head coach Todd Bowles has been given a much more talented roster compared to last year, when he improbably led the team to five wins.

However, the hot seat beneath him might start to warm even more should he lose on Sunday to the Dolphins.

The Jets are 2-10 on the road since the start of the 2017 season, which doesn't bode well against a Dolphins team that is 3-1 at Hard Rock Stadium this year.

Bowles' team has also become one of the most discomposed in football. Last week saw the Jets commit seven pre-snap penalties in their loss to the Bears, bringing their total up to 18 through eight games.

Their 53 penalties this season ranks 12th in the NFL, but they cannot have a repeat of Week 8 or else things will go down quickly — not only for the Jets' playoff hopes, but for Bowles' standing as head coach.

THE RETURN OF ELI

While the other Eli of New York, Giants quarterback Eli Manning, has been drawing the ire of many around the league, the Jets will likely see running back Elijah McGuire make his season debut after suffering a foot injury on the first day of training camp.

McGuire will begin just his second year in the league following a promising rookie campaign in which he posted 492 yards from scrimmage.

The Jets rushing offense has struggled over the last two weeks, ever since veteran Bilal Powell suffered a neck injury that will likely end his season.

Isaiah Crowell has not been able to carry the ground game on his own, which makes McGuire's return a welcome addition.

Both backs are poised for big games considering Miami's rush defense is tied for worst in the league.

NFL Week 9: Jets to cover in Miami

ROBERT CRISCOLA
letters@metro.usNY JETS AT DOLPHINS (-3)
Sam Darnold and the Jets have struggled to put up points in recent weeks, but a trip to Miami could be just what the doctor ordered.

The Dolphins, who have dropped four of their last five straight-up and against the spread, have surrendered an average of 33.4 points per game in that span.

Miami's run defense has been a sore spot, as they've allowed an average of 175.6 rushing yards per game over this sorry five-game stretch. They can expect a heavy dose of Isaiah Crowell on Sunday afternoon.

Darnold should be comfortable in the pocket too, as the Fish are third-worst in the league at getting to the quarterback (11 sacks).

Brock Osweiler is producing diminishing returns under center for Miami, as he exits a loss against Houston in which he posted a season-low 65.3 passer rating.

THE PICK: JETS +3PACKERS AT PATRIOTS (-5.5)

The Packers played admirably in defeat to the Rams last week, but things don't get any easier for Aaron Rodgers and company as they travel to Gillette Stadium to take on the New England Patriots on Sunday night.

New England's balanced offense had been driving the opposition crazy until Monday night, when the Bills were able to make crucial stops. But the Patriots successfully leaned on their defense and held Buffalo to just six points and forced two takeaways. That enabled New England to cover the spread for the fourth time in five games.

However, with Rodgers to defend instead of Derek Anderson, the Patriots' stoppers will probably revert to their customary 400-yard allowance.

But Green Bay's defense has allowed over 400 yards in two straight games, so Tom Brady should have no problem going through them either, especially if Sony Michel returns to the lineup. The Packers' stoppers took a step backward at the trading deadline, as star safety Ha Ha Clinton-Dix was dealt to the Redskins.

Points should not be difficult to come by based on these teams' styles, and the betting total (56.5) reflects that. So giving 5.5 points with the Patriots, who are 9-3 against the spread in their last 12 home games, is not that onerous.

THE PICK: PATRIOTS -5.5You and your team are cordially invited to the Inaugural Tournament of "The Augustine League".
